This book is the result of a great effort on the part of the two editors and 16 other contributors; biographies of each are presented at the end of the second volume. Many others (listed below) played a major role and are named in the appropriate species accounts. Still others made important contributions by publishing their works or observations in major journals and more recently online, and we thank them for their valuable contributions.

With any work of this magnitude and complexity, there are numerous people to be thanked for their assistance in many ways. Gathering information for such a vast and remote area has been a formidable task. Unlike in other provinces and territories, no organized birding groups exist in Nunavut, but many individuals who live there and many who visit have contributed in countless ways by sharing their knowledge and field notes in a truly cooperative effort.

We value and greatly appreciate the donation of original artwork (Passenger Pigeon and Eskimo Curlew) especially commissioned for this book from wildlife artist Barry Kent MacKay, and we thank him for his talent and generosity.

We acknowledge with gratitude the use of published and unpublished field notes and a wealth of additional information shared by the following: Ray Alisauskas, C. Anderson, Ted Armstrong, Christian Artuso, Yves Aubry, Joanne Barbazza, Robert Bateman, Gerry Binsfeld, Hans Blokpoel, Tim Bowman, Birgit Braune, Christine Brodie, Rod Brook, Pierre Brousseau, Lynn Brodsky, Bob Bromley, George Bryant, Peter Burke, Mike Burrell, Page Burt, Dan Byers, Suzanne Carrier, John Chardine, Bonnie Chartier, Gilles Chapdelaine, Ted Cheskey, Red Clarke, Glenn Coady, Monica Connolly, John

We apologize if anyone has been overlooked.

Local people have always contributed to ornithological research programs in Nunavut, providing essential assistance with boat and dog-sled travel, sharing local knowledge and observations, working as bear monitors and field assistants, and increasingly participating in the planning and implementation of research through initiatives of the governments of Nunavut and Canada, as well as the development of programs such as the Arctic Eider Society, which works with Inuit and Cree communities in Hudson Bay to address environmental change affecting sea ice ecosystems through research, education, and outreach (<https://arcticeider.com>). Consequently, the field work that is being carried out is increasingly transparent to local communities and takes more into account local subsistence needs. Local involvement is likely to grow in the future.

Over and above the bulk of the photos supplied by the various contributors (J. Richards, M. Peck, M. Mallory, M. Lamont, G. Carpentier, K. Abraham, J. Leafloor, P. Smith, V. Johnston, and A. Gaston), the following made generous donations of photographic images: Ray Alisaukas, Christian Artuso, Margaret Bain, Frank Baldwin, Raymond Barlow, Sam Barone, Birgit Freybe Bateman, Andréanne Beardsell, Chris Bell, Hans Blokpoel, Saul Bocian, Jacques Bouvier, Brian Boyle (Royal Ontario Museum), Ann Brokelman, Rod Brook, Canadian Wildlife Service, John Chardine, Rachel M. Chiasson, John Conkin, John Coons, Gord Court, Lucas DeCicco, Christian Devroe, Gerard Dewaghe, Nick Docker, Ducks Unlimited Canada, Cameron D. Eckert, Karl Egressy, Scott Flemming, Glen Fox, Lev Frid, Grant Gilchrist, Alex Gray, Google Earth, Cory Gregory, Tim Haan, Joel Heath, Holly Hogan, David Iles, Jean Iron, Mike Johnson, Kev Joynes, Bruno Kern, Clare Kines, David Koons, Nadine Lamoureux, Josée Lefebvre, Ashley Lutto, Bruce Lyon, Bruce Mactavish, Mike McEvoy, Bob McLandress, Doug McRae, Janice Melendez, Wm. A. Montevecchi, Brian Morin, Tim Neidenbach, Clark Nissley, Ken Newcombe, Mike Osborne, George K. Peck, Gunnar Pettersson, Heather Pickard, Lisa Pirie, Tony Power, Jennifer Provencher, Andy Raedeke, Austin Reed, Martin Reedy, Vittorio Ricci, Bryce Robinson, Jim Robinson, Lynne Rollin, Gerald Romanchuk, Tom Rook, Nick Saunders, Marnie Shepherd, Andrew Silver, Greg Schneider, Don Sutherland, Glen Tepke, Declan Troy, Michelle Valberg, Josh Vandermeulen, Russ Weeber, David Welbourne, Eleanor Kee Wellman, Michelle Wille, Paul Woodard, Allen Woodliffe, and Brian Young. Donor credits are listed with each individual photo.

We are grateful and deeply indebted to Ron Tozer for his detailed review, comments, and helpful suggestions on the nonbreeding species accounts. His comments on content and style all served to make this a better book.

In addition to contributors who read and commented on species accounts and various chapters, we thank the following for peer reviews and comments on one or more breeding species accounts within the scope of their professional expertise; we value and have incorporated their many comments and suggestions: Karen Abraham, Karel Allard, David Cairns, John Chardine, Tony Diamond, Christian Friis, Cheri Gratto-Trevor, Mike Harris, Mark Hipfner, Mark Maftai, Bill Montevecchi, Jody Morgan, Guy Morrison, Erica Nol, Lisa Pollock, Iain Stenhouse, and Paul Woodard.

We thank Phill Holder, Kerry Meydam, and Rhiannon Pankratz for miscellaneous technical assistance, and Mike Burrell, John Geale, Mike Settingerton, and especially Cameron D. Eckert for their help in accessing published materials and miscellaneous records. We acknowledge with thanks assistance from the following, who painstakingly researched Canadian Wildlife Service files and data: Lindsay Armer, Craig Machtans, and especially Rhiannon Pankratz.

We acknowledge with thanks Bird Studies Canada staff for summaries of all Christmas Bird Count (CBC) data as well as Ontario Breeding Bird Atlas (OBBA) data; the staff of the Canadian Wildlife Service in Yellowknife for various assistance; and numerous museums and institutions for providing access to their specimen collection records and photos, especially the Royal Ontario Museum in Toronto and the National Museums of Canada in Ottawa.

We are grateful for the work of all those listed on the dedication page for their formidable efforts in conducting fieldwork under the most extreme conditions in years past. As well, we acknowledge with thanks ongoing fieldwork and scientific studies by the many talented and dedicated researchers working in the harsh Canadian Arctic.

We offer our profound thanks to Robert Bateman, Tony Diamond, Denis Lepage, Bill Montevecchi, and R.I. Guy Morrison for dust-jacket endorsements, and to Jason Akearok, executive director of the Nunavut Wildlife Management Board, for writing the insightful foreword.

The editors extend a debt of gratitude to all contributors to this work. Extra thanks go to Vicky Johnston for assisting in such a major way with the fundraising, to Ken Abraham for his critical help with editing and tracking down obscure publications in the references section, and, finally, to Bob Montgomerie for writing his two detailed chapters and for preparing the index.

We wish to extend our sincere thanks to the dedicated and professional staff at UBC Press who laboured to make this book a reality in such fine fashion. We especially acknowledge Frank Chow (copy editor), Darcy Cullen and Randy Schmidt (acquisitions editors), Holly Keller (production editor), Eric Leinberger (cartographer), Nadine Pedersen (editorial coordinator), Melissa Pitts (press director), Irma Rodriguez (typesetter and designer), and Alexa Love (jacket designer).

Finally, we acknowledge with deepest gratitude the financial support provided by the following, which made the publication of this book possible: Bird Studies Canada; Canadian Wildlife Service, Environment and Climate Change Canada; Government of Nunavut Department of Environment; Langley Field Naturalists Society; The McLean Foundation; The Nature Conservancy of Canada; Nature London; North Durham Nature; Nunavut Wildlife Management Board; One Ocean Expeditions; Ottawa Field-Naturalists' Club; Toronto Ornithological Club; Vancouver Natural History Society (Nature Vancouver); The W. Garfield Weston Foundation; and World Wildlife Fund Canada.

Any and all errors or omissions remain the full responsibility of the contributors and the editors.
