

Indian Reserves Allotted for Fishing Purposes in British Columbia, 1849-1925

Douglas C. Harris

This table accompanies Landing Native Fisheries: Indian Reserves and Fishing Rights in British Columbia, 1849-1925, by Douglas C. Harris (Vancouver: UBC Press, 2008). It provides additional and supporting detail for the Indian reserves that were specifically allotted for fishing purposes.

The table is organized geographically and by First Nations language group or regional affiliation. It begins with the reserves allotted to the Coast Salish, and then moves inland, following the Fraser River, to the reserves allotted to the Nlha7kpmx, Stl'alt'imc, Secwepmec, and Tsilqot'in. It then moves east into the Columbia River drainage basin to include the reserves allotted to the Okanagan and Ktunaxa. The table then returns to the coast and works north from the Nuuchahnulth reserves on the west coast of Vancouver Island, to the reserves of the Kwakwaka'wakw, Oweekeno, Heiltsuk, Nuxalk, Haisla, Tsimshian, Haida, and Nisga'a. It then follows the Skeena River inland, listing the reserves allotted to the Gitksan and Wet'suwet'en, and then the Dakle reserves of the upper Fraser and Skeena rivers. Finally, it lists the Sekani and Tahltan reserves in the north.

With the exception of the reserves allotted under Treaty 8 in north eastern British Columbia, the table lists every reserve allotted for fishing purposes in British Columbia, the First Nation to which the reserve was allotted, the date of the allotment, the person responsible for allotting the reserve, and an extract from the document creating or confirming the reserve that included a reference to the fishery.

The table was compiled primarily from the Federal Collection of Minutes of Decision, Correspondence and Sketches from the Indian Reserve Commission, and from the Report of the Royal Commission on Indian Affairs for the Province of British Columbia (Victoria: Acme Press, 1916). The Schedule of Indian Reserves in the Dominion of Canada, recompiled and corrected by C.H. Taggart up to 31 March 1943, annotated by I.M.D. Fox, was an invaluable reference.

Note: Abbreviations used in the table: JIRC (Joint Indian Reserve Commission); Royal Comm (Royal Commission on Indian Affairs for the Province of British Columbia); M.D. (Minutes of Decision); F.M. (Field Minutes). These last two, as well as any references to fisheries noted on maps, are drawn from the Indian Reserve Commission's Federal Collection of Minutes of Decision, Correspondence and Sketches.

* Indicates the First Nation that currently holds the reserve. This is not always the same as the group to which the reserve was allotted.

 The individual or body named as allotting a particular reserve also allotted all the reserves that follow in the table until another individual or body is named. In some cases the reserve was first allotted before the Joint Indian Reserve Commission (JIRC) began its work in 1876, but was later confirmed by the JIRC or by Indian Reserve Commissioners Gilbert Malcolm Sproat (1878-80), Peter O'Reilly (1881-97), or A.W. Vowell (1898-1910). The later date is the one listed. For a list of reserves allotted before the JIRC see Lillian Ford and Cole Harris, "B.C. Colonial Indian Reserves" (unpublished paper, April 1999), archived at UBC Library, Special Collections.

 A dash in this column or the next one indicates that there was no document identifying the reserve as a fishery when the reserve was allotted. However, the reserve is included in the table because the Report of the Royal Commission on Indian Affairs for the Province of British Columbia (Victoria: Acme Press, 1916) noted the connection between the reserve and a fishery. See the final column in this table and the corresponding footnote (†). Where there is a document identifying the reserve as a fishery, the document was created by the person or body that allotted the reserve (listed in the previous column) unless another person or body is identified. Document dates prior to the allotment date indicate that the reference to a fishery was made by the person or body that first marked out the reserve.

† A mark in this column indicates that there was a reference to a fishery in Tables A and B in the Report of the Royal Commission on Indian Affairs for the Province of British Columbia. Table C of the report frequently includes references to fishing as an occupation of the inhabitants of a reserve, usually accompanied by other occupations (most frequently hunting, farming, and working for wages). Where there was not also a reference to fisheries in Tables A or B, the reserves where fishing was noted as an occupation in Table C are not included here, because the fishing activity is being ascribed to the inhabitants and not as a feature of the reserve. See the discussion in Landing Native Fisheries (Vancouver: UBC Press, 2008), p. 8.

‡ Reserve names are based on the Schedule of Indian Reserves in the Dominion of Canada, recompiled and corrected by C.H. Taggart up to 31 March 1943, annotated by I.M.D. Fox, Regional District Surveyor for B.C. Footnotes have been added to indicate current name where it is different.

¹¹ Sproat attempted to reserve fishing rights in addition to land-based reserves. The second mentioned location appears to be within or adjacent to Hope 1. It is possible that the third mentioned location was later allotted by Vowell as Tunnel 6, although that reserve appears to be located a little farther downstream. No reserve appears to have been allotted to encompass the first and fourth mentioned locations.

¹⁹ When Sproat confirmed the Yelakin reserve, which had been granted by O’Reilly in 1870, he added fishing stations to the north and south of the reserve that were never confirmed. See Landing Native Fisheries, 46-47.

²⁰ Sproat allotted this reserve in 1878. O’Reilly added to it six years later, and when he did he noted that the original reserve was an “old Fishing Reserve.”

²¹ The reserves on both sides of the Fraser River at Hells Gate were never confirmed. See Landing Native Fisheries, 47-48.

²² Sproat recommended a small five-acre fishery on the Fraser immediately below the existing Stlakament reserve. The references are to this addition, which was never confirmed.

²³ A settler had purchased or pre-empted land surrounding an important fishery of the Kanaka Bar and Siska. Sproat was unable to allot a reserve, but he sought to secure an easement for the Kanaka Bar and Siska that would allow access to and use of the fishery along the river frontage of the settler's land. This fishery was never confirmed. See Landing Native Fisheries, 49, 50.

²⁴ Sproat sought to secure a fishery situated between the Fraser and the Zacht 5 reserve. It was never confirmed.
